Message from the Sara

Sara with homebred Bulldog's Poppy & Dusty

I don't watch much broadcasted television nowadays. I've taken to streaming online on-demand. This flexibility allows me to watch what I want when I want, fitting into my schedule. This style of tv consumption often encourages some binge-watching. Netflix is excellent for this! They also recommend programmes you may be interested in from previous viewing interests.

I was recommended and started watching a few American Football series. I still don't have a clue what the rules are, but I find it fascinating watching the progression and determination, or not, of young athletes. I've enjoyed following 'Last Chance U' and Head Coach Jason Brown with his somewhat polarising ways.

In American Football, players must learn 'plans of action' or 'strategies' to move the ball down the field. They can be fundamental and intricate approaches to taking back control of the game and changing the state of play. The tactics must be memorised and learnt, as they are called out to the players using code words so the opposing team can't work out their plan of attack.

I can't explain it in more detail than that because sports rules generally go over my head! But these predefined groups of manoeuvres are the team's playbook.

Essentially, a Playbook is a set of rules or suggestions considered suitable for ANY particular activity, industry or job.

So it got me thinking.

WHY DON'T WE BREEDERS HAVE A PLAYBOOK?

A strategy to follow provides clarity that, over time, can be improved and developed from 'tried and trusted' practices.

I gotta admit, this concept got me super excited. In my honest (and accurate) opinion, a Breeder Playbook is massively needed and hugely overlooked.

I've attended many dog breeding seminars, courses and workshops and endless note-taking during my years of breeding, not to mention the countless hours of conversations with fellow breeders. Plus, the online research and the consumption of published books and veterinary textbooks, heck, I've even written my own on the subject.

But it made me realise these are all sources of great learning but don't bridge the gap to reality. You can't telephone the seminar presenter or author at 3 am when you need help or have an escalating related issue at home. What makes it even more challenging is that there are many stages to breeding, and you'll probably have many questions along the long and tiresome journey.

Everything in this Puppy Playbook, I've either personally used myself or written about it in my books, Not Born Yesterday and Doggy Style. I've created the perfect visualisation of the most prominent breeding points, essential for your puppy propagation programme.

You may be thinking, 'I've found free 'similar' loose-leafed templates online, why do I need this playbook?

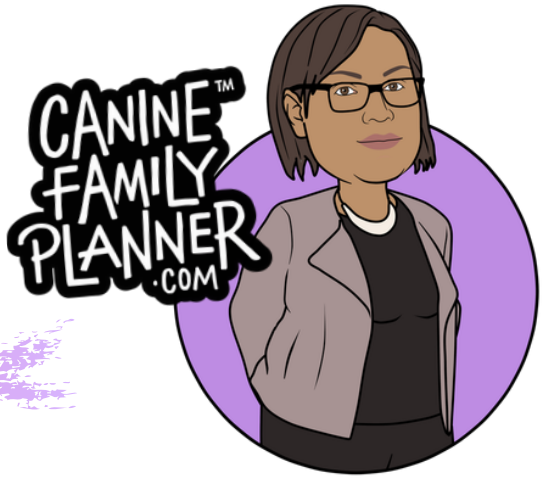

This puppy playbook collates information emphasising the best breeding practices. Through this journey, you'll require different skill sets as you transition through the stages, which is why explanatory videos accompany this playbook.

Free 'generic' resources won't have this level of detail or support. These videos reinforce principal activities in this playbook, providing additional clarity and purposeful actions guiding you through your entire breeding journey.

The playbook exercises encourage you to make choices and highlight issues in advance. This decision-making will build your confidence through each stage of breeding, enabling you to carve your canine accomplishments.

This playbook is for you if you are a new or novice breeder. But equally, if you are an infrequent but long-serving home breeder, then using a playbook will help capture your breeding strategy. This will enable you to breed consistently, galvanising previous experiences and correctly organising a future reliable framework for puppy prosperity.

This playbook will give you the clarity you need so that you can score that game-winning touchdown!

How to use this book

This booklet isn't your typical booklet; it's not just to be read and digested. If needed, it should be used (and abused) weekly, daily, or hourly. It's more of a workbook than a traditional book; it's full of resources that aid and guide you through your breeding journey.

So what do you need to accompany this book?

A dog you plan to breed, a writing implement and internet access to the Home Breeder Hub.

Okay, the dog is obvious, but a Pen or Pencil will also get you very far! This book was developed to be written on, doodled in and scribbled upon. Essentially it's a whelping workbook, the first of its kind. You'll need one book per planned breeding, and there's space on the front cover to write your female's name and the date for future reference.

The book is set out in chronological order, but there is no harm in completing the pages as you desire, where possible. The first pages will be more relevant to the start of your journey and the latter to the end.

There are spaces for you to capture your thoughts, opinions and experiences at the end of each section. Use this space to reflect on events and decide if the best approach was taken. If you're considering breeding again, ponder what you would do to improve the situation in the future. By improving, I mean more straightforward, quicker or cheaper without severe compromises.

Informative videos also accompany these pages called the Playbook Pathway, which you can access online at: caninefamilyplanner.com/playbookvideos. The video series is hosted within the Home Breeders Hub and provides a detailed breakdown of the activities and how they should be completed, along with additional advice and practical breeder hints, tips, and hacks. Solo Puppy Protocol

When I last checked, nearly 72% of the dogs I scanned were positively confirmed pregnant. Owners are always surprised when I confirm pregnancy for just one puppy, and I'm equally amazed when they comment that it's rare. Having looked over my figures, there's a 6.4% chance of a pregnancy being a solo puppy. This is much higher than the 2.3% chance of having a large litter of 10 or more puppies at just 2.3%.

Singleton puppies are not typically a reflection of the sire or dam's fertility. Untypically small litters are most likely due to the mating not happening at the fertile time. Either too early or too late, meaning the semen has only just managed to fertilise an egg by surviving and waiting for the egg to mature or by racing to it super quick before the egg degenerates.

The urban myth is that a female puppy results from mating too early and a male puppy from mating too late.

If the female is bred again, I highly recommend that ovulation testing be used, such as vaginal cytology swabbing or the more accurate Progesterone blood testing. I sent a quick email to all my clients I had previously scanned with solo babies (pure and crossbred) to find out their experiences after breaking the singleton news. They provided me with 32 sets of data which I've attempted to summarise constructively.

Singleton puppy was birthed by...

Naturally Whelped	C-section
62%	38%
85% born this way survived	42% born this way survived
	100% born by elective c-section survived

C - SECTION

On average, the puppies that naturally whelped and survived were born around 62 days gestation; the survival rate decreased from 63 days. Owners shared that the whelping process was 'typical', confirming that the puppy tended to be larger rather than average. For some, the labour stages were prolonged and arduous. 15% of the owners that whelped naturally said they would recommend other owners going through the same experience to the elective section on the due date.

Most owners mentioned no issues with milk production or the need to hand feed or supplement. 25% did visit their vet for additional physical checks and advice; one owner felt they were given poor advice and changed practices during this critical period.

NATURALLY WHELPED

On average, the puppies surviving by c-section were born around 61 days. The survival rate decreased from 65 days. Two owners felt their vet had delayed the option of a c-section (66 days) which compromised the puppy's viability. Most owners decided to have c-sections because their female had shown partial signs of labour and then stopped—suggesting more complex labour, possibly due to a stuck puppy or wrong positioning.

Some puppies were born naturally when the female had been sedated and prepared for a c-section. The relaxation of the muscles means the puppy was easier to pull free (these puppies were deceased). Distressed puppies did not survive the operation or longer than two days after birth, some seemed weak, and some dams were not attentive to their young. Of the owners with a veterinary agreement for an elective section on their due date, 100% of these puppies were born alive.

Solo Puppy Protocol

SUMMARY

Singleton puppies can be delivered naturally. The statics are in their favour. If the labour is not typical (mainly due to puppy size, positioning or lack of contractions), the chances of c-section increase significantly, but the survival rate reduces considerably too. Only a pre-planned elective c-section increased the survival rate above being whelped naturally. Risk can be managed by allowing the female to whelp naturally up to her due date, and should she go more than one day over, have an ultrasound scan to check for a foetal heartbeat and, if confirmed, opt for an elective section.

Puppies born 2 or more days after their due date have significantly fewer chances of surviving in both whelping methods. There is a high chance that financially you'll need to cover the costs of a c-section, given that an "unscheduled" emergency c-sections result in a higher mortality rate, realistically booking an elective c-section 'in hours' increasing the puppies rate of survival and keeping operating cost to a minimum, along with your anxiety and any stress on the female.

HUSBANDRY CARE

It's generally advised not to change the dam's diet during pregnancy, neither in quality nor in amount. Because the puppy has womb space to grow and develop, changing the dam's diet may entice the puppy to overgrow due to having no competition with littermates for nutrition or space. Being restrictive on food will hopefully prevent any excessive and unnecessary growth.

Even if the puppy is typical and the dam is maiden, you are still unaware of her ability to deliver naturally due to her pelvis size or strength of contractions. Females who have already successfully birthed puppies will provide the owner with additional information to gauge her ability to whelp. Raspberry leaf supplement is said to aid birthing before Labour. During Labour, any veterinary agreement to calcium supplements or oxytocin will help should weaken contractions.

The lack of contractions or weakening contractions is called inertia; with solo babies, it can happen in the first stage of labour due to the puppy not stimulating or applying enough pressure on the uterine wall and cervix to trigger a natural birth. The second stage is when contractions existed, but stop, mainly due to an oversized puppy and the muscles have become tired of trying to push the puppy out.

It could be easy to miss primary inertia, so I strongly recommend tracking the dam's temperature before and up to her due date. You also have the option of 'Reverse' Progesterone testing; if the numbers are low, this confirms the puppy is ready for birth, so you can confidently c-section. If you Progesterone tested on mating, you would have confirmed ovulation before breeding, so your due dates will be reliable to work with for possible c-section. Not all puppies will be seen moving or even felt, especially on deep-set breeds. I recommend checking the puppy for a viable heartbeat with an ultrasound before deciding on a c-section.

LONG TERM OBSERVATIONS

Surviving singleton puppies develop like typical puppies into adult dogs. Many commented that the puppy ended up more substantial than the breed standard or their Dams. Solo pups tend to be more demanding when it comes to play and stimulation due to the lack of siblings/playmates. They are more dependent on human interaction, and if not handled correctly, can become over-demanding and dominant. One owner decided to neuter their male at nine months old due to behavioural issues.

Puppy Feeding Guide

Tick once you've watched the relevant support video in the Playbook Pathway within the Home Breeders Hub ☐

This suggested feeding schedule is for healthy, breed-typical puppies who are control-fed due to Puppy box rearing. Each puppy feed should suckle for at least 20 to 30 minutes. This schedule is a guide; the number of feeds and the age of weaning may differ depending on the size, breed of litter or individual puppy progression. Free-feeding puppies do not require a schedule in the early weeks because the Dam is always present to feed. Regardless of feeding methods, puppies should be weighed regularly to verify sufficient development. Puppies' eyes must be open before weaning commences.

Feeds prefixed with * indicate early weaning for hand-reared pups, large-sized litters or inadequate milk quality or production from the mother.

! VETTING VIGILANCE !

As a breeder and owner, it's imperative that you keep your dogs and puppies protected and secure. Dogs have become highly desirable; dog theft has significantly increased in recent years. It's easier to steal and distribute a litter of puppies than adults, which are more obvious to identify and more likely to defend themselves during an altercation.

Microchipping is one of the most effective ways of reuniting dogs with their owners, as long as the contact details are current. Puppy viewings involve allowing fairly unknown strangers into your home, potentially leaving you a victim of crime.

Don't provide your exact address until 24-48hrs before the viewing. Your vetting process should have meant you have the visitor's full contact details, including address and contact numbers. Request that the visitors provide identification in advance, e.g. Passport or Photographic Driving Licence with a utility bill registered at the same address.

Never have visitors when you are the only person on the premises. Two strangers could soon dominate a situation, and you'll have no help or immediate backup.

Consider investing in a security system to protect your house and dogs. There are many types of surveillance systems, and it's worth seeking professional advice due to the huge array of options.

IDEAS FOR PRESENTING & PACKAGING PUPPY PACKS

The efforts expressed nowadays by Breeders and their puppy packs are reaching new levels. For some, this is the enjoyable part of breeding, seeing their puppies start their new life with their new owners supported with all the required provisions.

Online I've observed 'It's a boy or girl' balloons tied to bags containing their puppy packs, Mcdonald's 'Happy Meal' themed bundles and 'First Day at School' rucksacks.

These effort are not essential, obviously the puppy in the most important thing!

But it does suggest a high level of the thoughtfulness and care, indicating the puppies have been reared with the same intention.

Notes

Use this space to capture any poignant moments during your breeding journey, or just stuff you keep forgetting!

So what happens now?

CONGRATULATIONS... YOU DID IT!

Not only in following your breeding dream to fruition resulting in some gorgeous cute, healthy and well-adjusted puppies. You've also got this keepsake book to commemorate your fantastic adventure.

Like a human baby journal or record book, you can look back at the whole experience in time with fond memories.

This book should be cherished, and if you plan to breed again, it should be kept and reviewed when you tackle the task.

I hope that as a breeder, you'll end up with an archive of playbooks for each puppy pilgrimage. The playbooks will capture essential and critical information that will offer you future breeding insight, improving your breeding practices and procedures.

I would love to hear your feedback on how this book supported you during your experience. Scan the QR code or visit: caninefamilyplanner.com/ppbfeedback
